The Audit in 2013

This report is the fourth publication in a series on an on-going study into the concept of authenticity, which uses the Royal Mile as the case-study. The aim of this report is to provide an update to two previous Royal Mile audits in 2011 and 2012 and reveal changes, in particular, those related to non-residential street-facing doorways in the Royal Mile since the previous audit a year ago. The audit is conducted on the anniversary of the first audit, which was conducted between 15th and 21st July 2011.

Like the previous reports, it is predominantly a visual record of the street, with this report presenting 285 photographs. In addition to change, this report provides material that explores several themes that emerged as interesting during the study (e.g. kiltmakers, police boxes and graffiti). It also provides a visual insight into the 76 closes that characterise the Royal Mile as well as views from the Royal Mile down the numerous streets that run off the Royal Mile.

The report is completed with an Appendix that updates the previous Appendices for 2011 and 2012 and provides details about non-residential street-facing doorways in the Royal Mile. This is based upon data from the Scottish Assessors Association (SAA) Valuation Roll, downloaded on the 15th July. The street was walked between the 15th and 17th July to record changes in the street. Over 1,500 photos were taken over the period 15th July to the 26th July, from which were selected the collection presented. These are presented in relatively low resolution to enable the production of a Word document, whilst the finer detail is preserved in the original prints.

This report is one of a series which commenced with an audit of the Royal Mile in 2011 (Harwood & El-Manstrly, 2012a), repeated in 2012 (Harwood & El-Manstrly, 2012b) and now this year. Details about this study are presented in the first report “An Audit of a UNESCO World Heritage site - the Royal Mile, Edinburgh: a preliminary search for authenticity” (Harwood & El-Manstrly, 2012a). As stated in the first publication, “the overall aim of the study is to attempt to understand the multi-faceted nature of authenticity and establish whether and how the concept of authenticity can be used by businesses and policy makers” (Harwood & El-Manstrly, 2012a). Complementing the audits is a working paper, which provides a scholarly grounded conceptualisation of the Royal Mile through the lens of authenticity (Harwood & El-Manstrly, 2012c).

The ‘Toured Object’ revisited

The audit of the Royal Mile in 2013 reveals that there have been changes affecting over 10% of the non-residential sites over the year since the audit in 2012. Details are presented in Appendix 1. The ownership / tenancy details from the SAA do not appear to have been updated for at least four sites. This is one difficulty with the use of the SAA data. Moreover, it does not capture details of sub-letting by the tenant. Nevertheless, the SAA data reveals seven changes in ownership, though for several of the sites, this may be due to re-organisation of the assets under new holding entities by their owners. There appear to have been nineteen changes in tenancy, excluding four sites where details appear not to have been updated. Again, there appear to be several cases where there has not been a change in tenancy, but a change in the name of the entity holding the tenancy. In terms of the total number of non-residential properties, there appears to be seven losses these related to self-catering accommodation.

When observable changes are noted, there appears to be seventeen sites that can be identified by changes in name (e.g. Royal Mile Cashmere, The Inn on the Mile) or activity (e.g. Kiltane, Mimi’s), irrespective of whether there has been a change of tenant. These seventeen sites are presented in the next section, together with five other sites, which have had changes of one form or another. This includes the refurbishment of the PDSA shop (for a new tenant?) which commenced during this study.

Table 1 provides an assessment of the changes in the use (+ / -) or name (‘other change’) of the non-residential sites over the year. The most significant change in the Royal Mile appears to be the loss of two newsagents, a grocers, an antiques shop, a charity shop and a musical instrument shop, whilst six outlets opened that offer woollens and related products (Kiltane, House of Cashmere, Thistle Do Nicely, Scottish Experience Cashmere, Macraes of Edinburgh, Holyrood Cashmere). In contrast, one outlet changes from a gift shop to a bakehouse (Mimi’s). The opening of another whisky specialist shop adds to the growing number, this being featured in a later section. A police box in the Lawnmarket is creatively re-used as a kiosk for the sale of gifts (F115, F116). Closed (vacant) sites increase by two. The Tron Kirk, which was listed as a historic building is reclassified as an entertainment centre, opening for the festivals. As for the other sites, where there has been a change in ownership or tenancy, it is assumed that the business continues as before.

⁴ The Scottish Experience was split into the House of Cashmere and The Whisky Trail. A former police box was opened as a kiosk. The Royal Mile Grocers became a Kilt Makers before becoming vacant. Two newsagents, the aforementioned grocers, an antiques shop, a charity shop and a musical instrument shop are lost to the Royal Mile. There are four changes in name. Six outlets open offering woollens and related products (Kiltane, House of Cashmere, Thistle Do Nicely, Scottish Experience Cashmere, Macraes of Edinburgh, Holyrood Cashmere). One outlet changes from a gift shop to a bakehouse (Mimi's).

THEMES

The Royal Mile presents a wide range of artefacts and offerings. Six themes have been selected which shed light into the manner in which Scotland as a place is given meaning through particular products (e.g. cashmere products, as well as kilts and whisky) and services (e.g. tours). Also presented is an insight into how redundant Police Boxes are given a new life and how the youth of the local community view living in the Royal Mile through the lens of graffiti.

Cashmere

That three new outlets with 'Cashmere' in their name have opened in the last year, with another two new outlets selling cashmere products highlights the perceived opportunity for these type of products. A wander around the cashmere outlets reveals a variety of brands, some being more distributed amongst retailers than others. Brands include:

- Edinburgh (from 1437)
- House of Edinburgh
- Johnstons of Elgin (since 1797)
- Lochcarron
- Lochmere
- Lyle & Scott
- Marchbrae

F 57, F 58, F 59, F 60

Kilt Makers

There appear to be only three relatively long established independent kiltmakers located on the Royal Mile, Geoffrey (Tailor), Celtic Craft Centre and Gordon Nicolson Kiltmakers. There are others who, upon a visit to their site, offer a kiltmaking service (e.g. Marchbrae and The Woollen Mill), but only two appear to explicitly promote kiltmaking. The first is Hector Russell - Kiltmaker, a subsidiary of The Edinburgh Woollen Mill, and John Morrison Kiltmakers, the established name acquired by a successful entrepreneur. Kiltmaking is a craft that employs specialist kiltmakers and proprietary techniques and designs, but with unclear standards as to what constitutes a 'quality' kilt.

The Kiltmakers are presented in the order as found when walking down the Royal Mile from the Castle.

Graffiti

Graffiti, as part of contemporary culture, is illustrated on the boards around the Caltongate site, made 'legal' with the permission of the site's owner Artisan. The fourth photo (F101) presents, through the skills of graffiti artists, the impressions and experiences of the Royal Mile by the local community, particularly its youth. This was an innovative project held on 'Community Day', held 13th April 2013 at the Canongate Venture as part of the Royal Mile Project, facilitated by City of Edinburgh Council. Behind these boards, on the gable wall, is the alleged artwork of a reputable 'Berlin Crew'.

CLOSES, WYNDS & COURTS

Whilst the Royal Mile forms the spine of the Old Town of Edinburgh, the closes and wynds are its ribs. This creates the herring bone structure that characterises the medieval city. The Royal Mile is positioned on the glacial tail behind a volcanic plug, upon which sits Edinburgh Castle. This tail slopes down to the east flattening in the location of Holyrood Palace. On either side of the tail are relatively steep slopes, upon which are to be found the 76 closes (passageways), as well as wynds (side-streets) and courts. Whilst the slopes are disguised by the buildings, which can have as many floors below the level of the Royal Mile as above, this slope is revealed in the closes and wynds as well as in the streets, each characterised by how they have been engineered (e.g. slopes, stairs, bridges).

F 120 View from Greyfriars Kirk

Whilst, over the centuries, buildings have changed and, in places, been replaced, the legacy of the establishment of the fabric is that many of the closes and wynds still exist, though perhaps not in their original location or extent. However, in whatever form they do exist, they vary widely in height, width and frontage as well as backstage. Two features of a number of closes is their use as holding areas for refuse bins (e.g. World's End Close, F186; Old Fishmarket Close, F157) and the way public access is no longer possible, due to locked gates (e.g. Geddes Entry, F194; Bishop's Close, F202) or them becoming a business entrance (e.g. Gibb's Close, F218).

APPENDIX 1 An audit of non-residential properties on the Royal Mile

This table was compiled in July 2013 using data gathered by ‘Walking’ the Royal Mile. It provides a listing of street facing doorways and excludes properties accessed through closes. Proprietor and Tenant details were identified from the public document, The Valuation Roll, provided by the Scottish Assessors Association. It has already been mentioned that the accuracy of the data contained on the Valuation Roll has not been verified, with the possibility that these details have not been updated, particularly for more recent changes in ownership / occupancy. The data highlighted in red reveals changes identified in 2013 relative to 2012. The data highlighted in green reveals changes identified in 2012 compared to 2011. Italics reveal the previous form.
